

Art History and Archaeology

TALKS

sharing knowledge and findings

The Art History and Archaeology Talks are organized by National Museum and National Museum Institute to keep alive interest in new art historical findings and allowing scholars to present new interpretations in the field to fellow museum professionals, scholars, art enthusiasts and students.

The Art History and Archaeology talks will invite young scholars and new research to be shared on a platform that allows discussion, debate and encouragement to new thought processes and initiatives being taken in the field.

Practices of Design History and Design Curating

by
Jane Pavitt

Professor Jane Pavitt is Dean of the School of Humanities at the Royal College of Art, and, until recently, was head of the V&A/RCA History of Design Postgraduate programme. She was a research fellow and curator at the V&A Museum from 1997-2010, where she curated a series of exhibitions about modern and contemporary design and architecture, including Cold War Modern: Design 1945-70 and Postmodernism: Style and Subversion 1970-1990. In this lecture, she will talk about her practice as a curator and historian, and how design history can engage with broad audiences through exhibitions.
